The Firm’s Antitrust and Trade Regulation Practice advises companies across every major industry on antitrust merger enforcement, national security reviews before the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States (CFIUS), antitrust litigation and investigations, as well as regulatory and compliance matters related to cross-border activities.

“As clients navigate their most challenging antitrust and trade regulation matters, they will benefit from the depth and diversity of experience brought by our new practice leaders,” said Paul Curnin, Global Co-Chair of Simpson Thacher’s Litigation Department.

Jon Youngwood, Global Co-Chair of Simpson Thacher’s Litigation Department added, “The collective leadership of Peter, Sara, John and David will further enhance our ability to advise clients as they encounter an increasingly complex regulatory and enforcement environment.”

Peter Guryan, a leading antitrust practitioner based in the Firm’s New York office, focuses his practice on representing major corporations and private equity firms in a wide range of antitrust matters, particularly mergers and acquisitions, and investigations by the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) Antitrust Division, and the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), as well as the European Commission and antitrust authorities globally. A former senior official at the FTC for nearly a decade, Sara Razi is based in the Firm’s Washington, D.C. office where she represents companies across a variety of industries on merger reviews, antitrust litigation, and counseling on competition issues. She also has extensive experience advising clients on antitrust investigations by the DOJ, FTC, and state attorneys general.

John Terzaken, former Director of Criminal Enforcement of the DOJ’s Antitrust Division, is also based in Washington, D.C., and represents clients in government enforcement actions and private litigation involving cartel and other alleged antitrust violations, market sector investigations and antitrust compliance.
